“ It occurs to me more recently that Nick has known me longer than anyone else besides my own family. It was so swift that we were all extended family it makes it difficult to remember that there was a time when Nick and I were strangers. When I was 11 and my brother and I found him with his friends firing a bow in the front yard. It's a perfect image of him in my head that I've not forgotten and won't. Today it feels exemplary of his character.. His love of life and the prospect of adventure - the pursuit of its experience and all it had to offer. I'll miss that from him, that love of life, his candor, and his kindness. He was the rock of every group he became a part of and his role was always integral to the dynamic. I'll never forget the boy with the bow and arrow.
